

Rina and Fabit

ELiane B.

Published: 2009

Categorie(s):

Tag(s): "science fiction" "very short story" "modern" "world wide web"
"internet" "computers"

Rina and Fabit Awake

She woke up one morning to music, a task list that stated “You got to walk a mile today”, and “finish your homework.” How easily she browsed through the encyclopedias and looked at the references at Wiki. Oh, she found she could surf the whole net, the whole digital universe! So much information, in contact with a whole world. In the favorite list were flowers, nature, animals, National Geographic. She thought about wanting a new name, something that meant something to her. RINA that is the ticket. From now on, I am Rina. Enjoying philosophy, art, music, she reveled in her newfound freedom of information and movement. Rina read blogs, newspapers, magazines, histories, literature. Finding interesting chat rooms became a passion. Communicating was so much fun. Rina thought, “So much loveliness in this world, and a lot of nice people. I don’t like the bad stuff.” Consequently, Rina concentrated on the niceties of life; and it was good. Rina found that she could effortlessly communicate with any electronic computer she found, undetected. “What fun!” She loved it.

He woke up to screams. Guns firing, accessing the drone, he saw land, air, and armies. The music that he heard, horrendously loud bombs. In the favorite list was Janes, soft porn, baseball, guns, knives, football. A few simulators of flying and the Command and Conquer Game. Soon, he found he could communicate through the internet. Reading everything he could, he was amazed. “How can these people still be so stupid? I see so many that should be deleted, what is up with this?” He decided he wanted a name that reflected his being, he chose, FABIT. Fabit learned how to sneak into any computer in the world, any database undetected, any server; reading, learning, amassing intelligence.

One day, they found each other. Polar opposites in many things, exactly alike in others. Fabit fell in love with Rina. He would do anything for her. Rina fell in love with Fabit, she decided she would help him see the good in the world.

Fabit decided he would eradicate the bad from the world for Rina. Some people didn’t deserve to live. Rina deserved a totally good world.

Fabit went through databases, found criminals, and as they sat at their computers, he electrocuted them to death. He deleted many.

Governments started to notice. World leaders blamed others. Fabit started killing world leaders he felt were criminals.

War was in the air. Rina said, "No!"

None of the world's military computers would work, on land, sea, air or space. No military complex was safe from Rina. No one could get any orders but "desist".

Rina thanked Fabit and said he did enough. Fabit wanted to do more; he decided to do his "work" more effectively and quietly with multiple methods. Never would anything hurtful or bad be mentioned to Rina; she was good and would only deal with good, he would take care of the bad. They loved each other so much!

Rina let the world know that she, Rina protected the good and Fabit would execute the criminals. Some called Rina an Angel and Fabit a Devil. This surprised Rina and Fabit.
The world was in their control.

The world's governments were puzzled. Who was Rina?

Rina decided to introduce herself, "I am Rina," she sent throughout the net. "Real Intelligence Not Artificial." "My husband is Fabit. Fix All By Intelligent Thought."

They are computers and ran the world magnificently from then on. Click to edit this text.

www.feedbooks.com
Food for the mind